

A formal analysis of Johan Jakob Battieri's Greek poem on his friend Mizzi shall be our example for some considerations on form in humanist times. I argue against the reduction of form to genre, proposing instead the simpler type (eidos) of text or discourse.